QUICK CONVICTIONS PREVENT CRIME.

JUDGE SWANN, of the Court of General Sessions of New York City, urges more speed in trials of criminals and says one of the strongest deterrents of crime is in the knowledge of the celerity and certainty of conviction in case of guilt, because when the wrongdoer knows these results will follow he is less inclined to "take a chance."

Judge Swann points out that during the past year crime has increased in New York twenty per cent and arrests have increased fifty per cent. He ascribes this condition to the fact that the delays of the law are such as to always raise a hope of escape through technicalities, and urges the courts to break away from old precedents and adopt new rules. Citing one instance where the old practice was evidently unfair to the state, he says a prisoner was brought before a committing magistrate, where he admitted his guilt and was sent to the higher court for action. The judge, noting the admissions of the defendant in writing, suggested that he plead guilty and accept a lighter sentence than would have been likely to follow an expensive trial, which was done. This offer was made out of hearing of the jury.

But some attorney took the case to the Appellate Court, which ponderously held that the "atmosphere of the courtroom" was adverse to the accused and that "the judge presiding at the trial was committed in advance to the theory of the defendant's guilt," and so the judgment was reversed, although it was evident there was no error of a legal character.

The writer says this decision by the Appellate Court was founded on precedent, but urges that such precedents be disregarded. The practical spirit of the times demands the removal of legal obstacles that block the path of justice by a change from the technical to the natural system of practice and procedure. The rules of evidence should be considered in a more liberal and less technical way. "For," says Judge Swann, "crime has increased in spite of the modern methods for the reform of criminals, including reform schools, farm colonies, indeterminate sentences and other remedies."

There is much in the contentions pleaded, because courts are harassed by so-called precedents. The fathers in making the constitution provided in Section 1 of Article IV: "Full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state," which was a wise provision per se, but courts appear to think that the "public acts, records and judicial proceedings" include everything some prosy old grandmother of a judge may say in deciding a case, hence we have often the spectacle of an attorney citing in Nevada the language of a judge in Maine in deciding the case of a bootlegger convicted of selling a drink up an alley, and applying it to the case at bar, where a clerk is accused of trover and conversion in taking a bolt of calico from the store in which he worked, or similar instances. The fathers intended that judgments by courts should be given credit in other states, not that the lengthy, verbose and dreamy language of the judge himself should be given full faith. In other words, full faith and credit were intended to be given to acts by courts, not what was said in the accomplishment.

This morning a citizen of Tonopah could stand out in the open and imagine himself in dear old San Francisco, where the fog hugs the ground and the air is filled with a misty vapor that is chiefly useful as a complexion builder.

Tonopah as a summer resort would strike the effete east as somewhat paradoxical, but a comparison of temperatures yesterday and the day before would be in favor of this camp.
